Seminar

The seminar topic 'Social Sciences in the Age of AI: History, Policy, and Society' addresses the profound, multi-dimensional impact of Artificial Intelligence on human structures, research methodologies, and governance. It explores how AI is reshaping social science disciplines such as history, sociology, economics, and political science by shifting from traditional, qualitative approaches to data-driven, computational methods. As AI transitions from a technical tool to a social force, it is redefining the human experience. This seminar provides an interdisciplinary platform to analyze how AI impacts historical research, public policy frameworks, and the very structure of society. We aim to move beyond 'tech-hype' to understand the ethical, legal, and sociological realities of the 21st century.
